

ABSTRACT

The disclosed invention provides computer-implemented systems and methods for designing a power substation. The inventive method includes identifying functional requirements for the power substation and generating at least one substation design satisfying the functional requirements from a library of substation components. Additionally, functional preferences are identified and used to rank the generated substation designs.

[illegible]